Neil Beloufa - Counting on People

Exposition ◆ dimanche 26 avril 2015 - samedi 20 juin 2015 ◆ Stroom Den Haag

This spring Stroom Den Haag presents the exhibition Counting on People by the French-Algerian artist Neil Beloufa. In this exhibition Beloufa reflects on how rationalization and (digital) technology have an increasing influence on society today, on our daily life and on the way we interact and communicate with each other. Beloufa's installations and films enable the audience to experience the way we increasingly rationalize our desires and base our decisions on big data, statistics and algorithms. We have become addicted to numbers, and we don't rely on our intuition anymore.

Stroom presents Counting on People within the context of the two-year program Attempts to Read the World (Differently). This program is an extended collaboration with four artists: Neil Beloufa, Fernando Sanchez Castillo, Céline Condorelli and Dunja Herzog. Attempts to Read the World (Differently) zooms in on important changes in (Western) society. In 1919 the sociologist Max Weber wrote in his book Science as a vocation how 'the fate of our times is characterized by rationalization and intellectualization and, above all, by the disenchantment of the world'. ARW(D) makes an attempt, with artists at the helm, to look further, to dig deep and to look for the small cracks in the rational system, to look at a different reality, to look for new meaning, new forms of knowledge, information or communication. The four invited artists take the first steps towards a new way to read, interpret and imagine a rationalized world.
